INFRARED HEATERS

Features

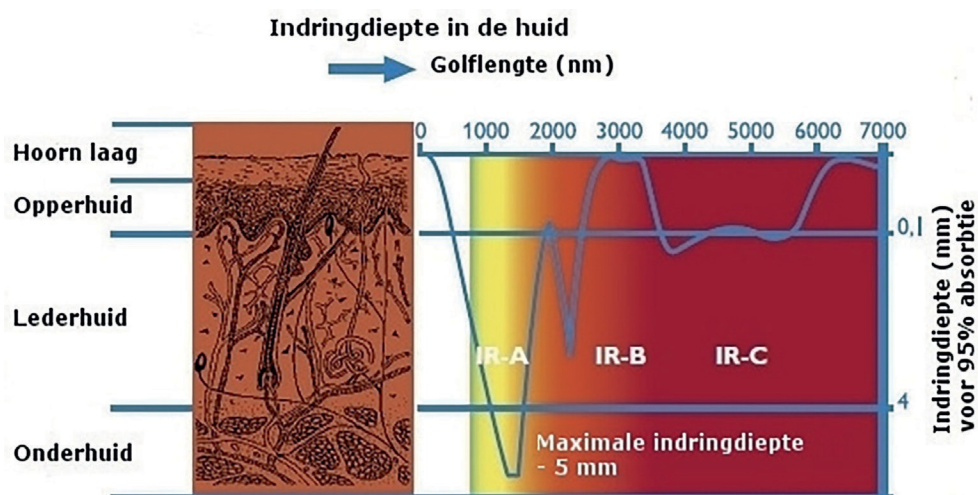

Infrared radiation is a form of light. It's all around us, but we can't see it. We can, however, feel it—as heat. Infrared is what makes sunlight feel warm on our skin. The heaters in an infrared sauna actually work the same way. Regular use of your infrared cabin is completely safe. There are no restrictions whatsoever, and you can use it as often as you like. Even if you'd like to have a quick, intensive infrared session a few times a week, a cabin equipped with these so-called therapeutic Full Spectrum lamps is an excellent choice.

Combining with a Sauna

An infrared cabin can also be combined with a sauna. The emitters operate independently of the sauna heater. A major advantage of the infrared emitters is that they deliver their full power immediately; so you don't have to wait for the cabin to heat up.

Controlling Infrared Heaters

If there are multiple infrared heaters, you can divide them across two zones. You can also adjust the intensity of the heaters per zone. Dimming the heaters can be pleasant if you find the intensity too high or too low. Each heater has a power output of 500 watts.

Infrared Radiation

Infrared radiation penetrates the upper layer of the skin without heating it. The result is deep heat, which is absorbed by the body. Blood circulation increases, and blood flow to the skin improves. Blood vessels in the underlying fatty tissue absorb the deep heat, dilate, and thus ensure better blood flow to the fatty tissue. The fatty acids stored in the fat cells are broken down and eliminated from the body via the lymphatic system.

In short, all kinds of waste products leave the body. The heart rate increases slightly, resulting in a passive fitness workout. This is similar to a warm-up, which can help prevent sports injuries.

Benefits of Infrared

- Fast and effective localized or overall weight loss through the body's massive energy expenditure.
- A significant improvement in physical condition, as many bodily functions become more active. Increases vitality.
- A significantly improved metabolism
- Increases connective tissue elasticity and immediately improves blood circulation, which can alleviate symptoms of tired or heavy legs.
- Strengthens the immune system
- Relief from many rheumatic and joint complaints
- Reduces cellulite
- Elimination of waste products
- Combats fatigue, stress, headaches, and sleep disorders
- Healthier complexion.
- Natural muscle building through physical exertion and body contouring.
- Relaxes and loosens the muscles.
- Recovery from injuries and wound healing for sprains, joint inflammation, and muscle pain.

Using the infrared cabin

Regular use of your infrared cabin is completely safe. There are no restrictions, and you can use it as often as you like. A typical session lasts 20 to 30 minutes. It's important to listen to your body. If the heat makes you feel uncomfortable, we recommend consulting your doctor.
